Nigel Holloway

Director, Industry & Management Research, Americas
Economist Intelligence Unit

Nigel joined the Economist Intelligence Unit in April 2004 as director for the Americas in the editorial department of Industry & Management Research, which conducts research and publishes reports sponsored by companies. This is his second stint at The Economist, having worked for the magazine in 1980-86, first in London and then in Singapore as the Southeast Asia correspondent. Before this, he was a journalist at the BBC.

In 1986, he joined the Far Eastern Economic Review, a news magazine based in Hong Kong, first in Singapore, then Tokyo, Hong Kong and Washington DC. In 1997, he became the founding deputy editor of the international edition of Forbes magazine, based in New York where he worked for five years, subsequently setting up on his own as an editorial consultant until he joined the EIU. Nigel was a journalist on newspapers, magazines, newswires, TV and radio in Europe, the Americas, Australasia and Africa. He co-wrote a book on the Japanese stock market called Unequal Equities and edited another on Japan's relationship with Asia.

He gained his bachelor's degree from Magdalen College, Oxford, and spent 1993-94 at Harvard in the US-Japan Program.
